

PCA Electronics COVID-19 Statement and Update

March 19, 2020

PCA is working within the constraints put in place by state and local authorities in order to help stop the spread of CoronaVirus (COVID-19).

Our main office in North Hills, California will continue to operate, but some of our staff will be working off-site.

Manufacturing operations in Manila continues, with a reduced staff. The Philippine government has issued a quarantine for Manila and is restricting people's movement there.

The flow of materials has not been affected. The government has requested that businesses and factories continue to operate with staff who are able to remain on site or in close proximity. We currently have a small working group at the factory. We expect that some customer orders will be delayed. We are doing our best to process orders with our reduced staff. Critical orders may be transferred to our Shenzhen plant if needed.

Our other global facilities are coming back on line, and we are now shipping products out from these locations.

Since the value of our lives is greater than the products we produce, we will abide by the limitations being placed upon us in order to more rapidly recover from this terrible situation. We have taken precautions at our factories to limit the exposure of our staff to the virus, and have advised them of the safety procedures that our medical professionals have advised us we should follow. Some of our staff are able to work from home in order to further reduce their exposure.

In the coming weeks, it is possible that some of our customer's shipments may be delayed. We will keep our customers updated either by direct emails or by a notice on www.pca.com.

PCA has weathered a variety of conditions that have affected us professionally and personally for over 70 years, so the staff at PCA are both experienced and committed to reducing the impact of the current situation on our clients. Please know that you can count on us to support our valued customers in any way possible

Sincerely,

PCA Electronics - Dedicated to our clients' success for over 70 years
